A spectator picks a date and time and commits it to memory. They then watch the locked screen of an iPhone closely.

They begin to see the time on the locked screen tick back, slowly at first. It then starts to speed up, getting faster and faster. Days, months, hours, and minutes fly past in a blur -- then it begins to slow, finally stopping on their thought-of date and time. NO APPS used in this effect. No funny moves. No complicated procedure. Beau has also created a method to perform a version of this effect on the SPECTATOR'S PHONE!
