

Inevitable Choice by Christian Grace

Like finding a "needle in a haystack", this impossible effect allows your spectator to find their own card in an impossibly fair way. Despite them making every decision, their final choice is ultimately inevitable.

"Inevitable Choice" from Christian Grace and Vanishing Inc. magic will seemingly rob your spectator of their free will. You show them a deck with all different cards. They select a card which is then shuffled and lost into the deck. You then start dealing cards face down to the table. They can call "stop" as many times as they want as you go through the deck. Every time they do, you'll cleanly place a card to the side.

You then repeat this with the smaller packet they created until just a few cards remain. They make a choice from these cards and, impossibly, it is their selected card. They made all the choices themselves, yet this outcome was seemingly pre-determined from the start. They were destined to find their own card. No sneaky switches, steals or sleight of hand are needed. Using a special deck of cards and a super tiny bit of mental work, this effect is nearly self-working.
